A large crowd was assembled in front of the hotel. After a tune had been played by the Marine Band, Gen. Shanks introduced Senator Morton, who was received with long continued cheering.

After expressing his thanks for the compliment, Senator Morton gave a prospective view of the approaching presidential contest, in which the Democratic party would make a desperate struggle for power. Should they succeed, he said, it would only be by carrying the Southern States, and this they could not do except by a reign of terror which would intimidate Republicans at the polls or drive them into exile. After making some reference to the Kuklux, he held that if the Democrats got control of the central government they would not make appropriations to pay pensions to Northern soldiers, unless Southern soldiers were also provided for; that they would not pay the public debt, unless provision was made for the loss of slaves and property in the South. Tellord, an old rain and man, and one of the pillars of the county, who has been, as it were, in the very jaws of death for a month, is rapidly recovering, and his friends confidently expect very soon to see his familiar face once more on the streets.

debt, unless provision was made for the loss of slaves and property in the South; that this would add fifteen hundred or two thousand millions to the public debt; and that the colored men of the South would be disfranchised within sixty days, or reduced to slavery or serfdom. This, he claimed, was supported by their policy in not accepting the reconstruction acts as constitutional.

He criticised the property in the South; Jonesboro' merchants are rapidly filling their empty shelves with new and stylish spring goods. James Slemons, of the firm of James H. Dossen & Co., started this evening for New York city to purchase their stock of summer goods.

For five years past Jonesboro' has had a wedding about once a year, but since the dawn of eighteen hundred and seventy-one

The Holston Presbytery of the new and old school, combined, has been in dession for several days, at their church in this place, and, as a matter of course, we have been highly entertained with some excellent sermons from some of the learned Christian gentlemen attending the meetwedding about once a year, but since the dawn of eighteen hundred and seventy-one weddings have followed one another in such rapid succession that we now no longer marvel at them as things of wonnot accepting the reconstruction acts as constitutional.

He criticised the professed policy of the Democrats on the question of taxation, tariff, &c., as unsound, in many respects absured, and on some points mere pretense. The Senator paid a glowing tribute to President Grant's administration, which had funded the debt at a lower rate of interest than the old bonds, paid off $204, 000,000 of the public debt in twenty-five months, effected a grand peace policy with the Indians, and in a word every department had been managed with ability, integrity and success. Congress had also repealed taxes to the extent of $83,000,000, and if the administration goes on with the same success as in the post, he believed the income tax would be repealed at the next session. He predicted a glorious victory for the Republicans in 1872, when Indiana, heknew, would not forget the services of our soldiers and their glorious leaders, and closed with some further reference to the Democrats and their prejudices against colored people, and a word about the "gift of the Republican party" to the people of the District of Columbia in the shape of the act giving them the right of self-government.

I expect it is very much hoped that he will do well, and I should wonder if he had not been persuaded by his brethren to try it as sort of an experiment, as he was one of the most promising young lawyers in the upper counties anyhow, and if he succeeds, wears better clothes, keeps out of debt, that is so nobody knows it, buys him a house, goes to house keeping, or living with the old folks, and they don't charge him for board, some more of the legal fraternity will be for trying to delude some bewitching damsel into the belief that he is succeedingly admirably and will soon be a millionaire.

After music, Vice-President Colfax was introduced. He endorsed Senator Morton's tribute to the President, who, he believed, would be honored with the public approval in 1872 as in 1868. He then proved a large number of articles which Congress should put on the free list, but above all restore the American flag on the ocean, by abolishing all duties on articles entering into the manufacture of ships and ship stores.

Several amendments were voted on but no final action was reached.
